

Pressure Treated Yellow Pine

Pressure Treated Yellow Pine is a great choice when constructing a fence. An extremely popular product, Yellow Pine's unique structure allows for deep penetration of treatment preservatives. Add to that internal strength and external beauty and you have one of the most versatile products on the market. If you're looking for an exceptional fence at an affordable price, Pressure Treated Yellow Pine is the smart choice.

Spruce Stockade

Known as the "privacy on a budget" fence, Spruce Stockade is one of the most economical privacy fences available. Factory prefabricated panels, made from untreated Spruce lumber, are used mainly to define boundaries. If the need for a privacy fence outweighs the options of strength, versatility and beauty, make Spruce Stockade your fence decision.

Western Red Cedar

Western Red Cedar catapults your fence to the next level. A lightweight, straight grained lumber, Western Red Cedar offers low density and shrinkage factors for excellent dimensional stability. Brilliant color tones and natural resistance to moisture, decay and insect damage, Western Red Cedar has it all. For an authentic feel and the look of elegance, choose Western Red Cedar for your next fence project.

» Installation

Iroquois Fence installs all of our products with the same set of strict standards. All post holes are dug well below the frost line. Posts are set in wet mixed concrete made from scratch. Fence sections are constructed on site, custom built for each individual yard. Quality checks throughout the installation process are performed regularly and ensure that our standards are met.

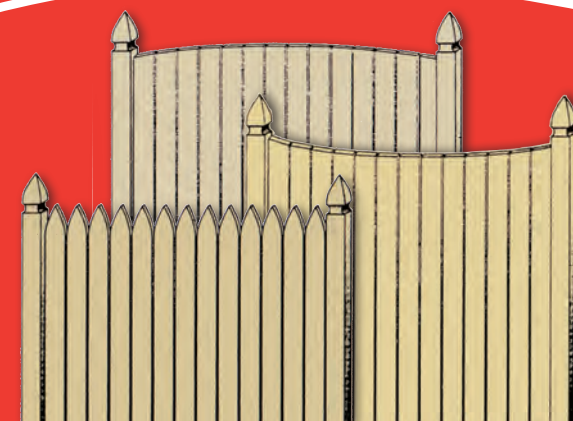

» Preservation

Preserving your new wood fence, through sealing or staining, is highly recommended. Applying a clear, semi-transparent, or solid preservative will enhance the beauty of your fence and help to slow the natural decay and weathering process. Your first application should be applied 3-6 months after initial installation. Continuing to preserve your fence every 4-5 years will protect and prolong the life of your fence. Check with your local paint store for information on which preservative is right for you.
